Certainly, in my opinion, a hero isn't just someone who defeats bad guys, or saves someone from a burning building, a hero is someone who doesn't act as the crowd, a hero is someone who steps up for what's right. For example, a hero is someone who fight for what's right, not just for their self but for everyone else, too. Looking back, I think Martin Luther King Jr. fits these qualities. For instance, a person like Martin Luther King Jr. changed the world and impacted so many lives. Especially black lives, because if Martin didn't do the things he did, the world would be definitely different for blacks and whites. In my opinion, that's what a hero is to me, and how Martin Luther King Jr. fits these qualities of being a hero.

Absolutely, I believe Martin Luther King Jr. fits these qualities to be a hero because of the things he has sacrificed and the things that happened to him and he never gave up. Undoubtedly, if he would have given up, the world would be a whole lot different, than it is now. Fortunately, he didn't give up. Now, because of what he did, black lives are treated the same as whites. Positively, now black children can grow up and have a good life because of him. In my opinion, that's why Martin Luther King Jr. is a hero.

However, what he did didn't come easily. Despite, all the things he had experienced, he had some rough times, while doing it. Sadly, he had been stabbed, arrested, and even his house was bombed. But surely, he never once gave up on his own goal "NEVER GIVE UP!" Certainly, because he never gave up, he made America great again.

Furthermore, this wasn't just his goal as an adult, to be specific; he had had the goal for blacks and whites to be equal since he was a little child. For this reason, when Martin Luther's best friend was white. Soon, his friend was sent to a different school, then, he knocked on the kid's door and his mother said he was busy, every day. They were never allowed to play again. Often, everything didn't seem fair to Martin. So then, when he grew up Martin thought he would try to change the idea of segregation.

These are a few reasons why Martin Luther King Jr. wanted blacks and whites to be equal, in my opinion.

Reflecting back on the research I did, those are a few reasons why Martin Luther King Jr. is a hero. In my opinion, also, I believe he fits the qualities. A hero isn't just someone who saves others from a burning plane, but is someone who overcomes challenges and inspires people. In my opinion, that's how Martin Luther King Jr. fits the qualities to be a hero.
