Putting it simply, Martin Luther King Jr. has had so many inspirational words to say in his lifetime. No matter what, he stood for what he decided and believed in. He was a really intelligent person. His quote, "Like anybody, I want to live a long life," has reflected his life a lot. He was on national television, at meetings with president John F. Kennedy, and out public speaking. Considering the facts just stated, he stood up no matter what to make a difference in his community.

Martin Luther King Jr. also made a very famous speech he called, "I Have a Dream," which is still known throughout the country. Martin became so well known, that his birthday became a federal holiday in 1983. Anyway his "I Have a Dream," speech was heard and many people loved it! Most likely, no one can repay his generosity and loyalty. Although he was thrown in jail several times, he still spoke his emotions and feelings deep inside him. His generosity and loyalty made his life a lot bigger than he probably thought it would be.

Martin was born January fifteenth, 1929. By the time he was only four, his voice was heard singing solos at the church he went to. Martin's church was called Ebenezer. As he was getting older, he started developing speeches and spoke them in public. The reason I feel these facts are important is that he spoke for his life and more than a million other lives in our country.

Unfortunately, Martin Luther King Jr. died April fourteenth, 1968 in Memphis, Tennessee. Everyone was devastated when they figured out the bad news. An assassin's bullets brought him down. James Earl Ray was suspected the crime suspect a while after the death. James even still continues to serve his 99 year sentence. I'm pretty sure that nobody will ever forget Martin and all he did for our country.

In conclusion, Martin Luther King Jr. was a role model for many people with his strong passionate words. He was so smart and he made a change. Actually, a big change! Even today, we look back and remember the nice caring person he was and how he made a change in the lives of millions of people. Adding up all the facts, Martin Luther King Jr. was a person who thought he could change the world, which he actually did, who stood up for what seemed to be floating around in his head to make a difference in the great big world all around him.
